Frederic Chopin has been considered one of the most profound and accomplished pianists in all of music history, and his music is among my favorite piano repertoire to perform. His skill at the piano was unprecedented - taking methods of composers such as Bach and Mozart and combining them flawlessly with his own new, unique style. This Polish composer was the first of his time to compose almost exclusively for piano, resulting in music said to be unconventional, radical, deeply personal, and able to leave audiences in awe. Chopin was not one for large public concerts, but rather preferred small exclusive recitals for aristocratic families. The various events of his life - a forbidden engagement to a childhood sweetheart, a devastating, failed insurrection by his homeland, a secret affair with a French poet, and a losing battle with tuberculosis - all provided Chopin with the opportunity to express his emotions through music. The results are astounding, and tonight you will hear a variety of moods, colors, and feelings portrayed through his works. I hope you enjoy...

"He felt, we felt that something of his life was flowing away with the music; he would not stop and we had not the strength to stop him. The fever which consumed him took possession of us all!"
